“Evaluating Project Success”

Scheduled Speaker:

Peter J. Sibilski, P.E, CEM, FAIChE
Plant Manager – Pharmetics Manufacturing Co. LLC

Traditional methods of determining project success take into account only whether the project met its budget and schedule. A more meaningful assessment evaluates the impact of the project on the organization. Many parameters and indicators can be used to determine project success, and companies should develop a consistent way to determine the parameters that should be applied to evaluate whether a project met its goals and objectives, and if it impacted the organization in both tangible and intangible ways. This presentation looks at a more holistic way to quantify project success.

Peter Sibilski has over 35 years of experience in project management, product development, and energy management in the process-chemical and pharmaceuticals industries. He has led diverse, cross-functional teams in achieving business-driven goals for projects of significant dollar value. Peter has a proven track-record of successful and award-winning product development and project implementation providing significant cost savings, increased operational efficiencies, and enhanced competitive position. He received his BSChE in 1981 from New Jersey Institute of Technology, and has an MBA – Technology Management from The University of Phoenix. Peter is a licensed PE in New Jersey, and is also a Certified Energy Manager (CEM).
